June 5 is HIV Long-Term Survivors Awareness Day (HLTSAD), annually observed on the anniversary of the first official Morbidity and Mortality Weekly Report (MMWR) on what would later become known as AIDS in 1981. HLTSAD celebrates the resiliency of long-term survivors living with HIV and highlights their journeys and challenges.

According to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention \(CDC\), of the nearly 1.1 million people living with diagnosed HIV in the United States and dependent areas in 2022, 64% were aged 45 and older. Thanks to advances in antiretroviral therapy, or ART, people who are diagnosed early and start and remain on ART can live long, healthy lives. Here are some inspiring perspectives from HIV long-term and lifetime survivors:

“It’s amazing how far we’ve come in HIV treatment. The research is available, personal testimonies are available; always advocate for yourself. Find a medical team that will support you if you lack support. Be confident in who you are and what you want to do and stand on that! You may have HIV, but it doesn’t have you.”

~ Ashley Cason, “I am a Work of ART” Creative Partner; living with HIV since birth

“My life is still productive, and I was diagnosed 32 years ago. To live during the height of the HIV epidemic and to still be here is a blessing. I don’t give my diagnosis a lot of power over me. My destiny is to be an example for the younger generation to let them know they will be ok too!”

~ Jimmie Brooks, “I am a Work of ART” Creative Partner; living with HIV since 1992

Even when HIV is well-controlled, people may develop aging-related conditions at a younger age. People living with HIV are significantly more likely to develop cardiovascular disease than people without HIV. Older people living with HIV also have an increased risk of dementia, diabetes, osteoporosis, frailty, some cancers, and falls. It is common for older adults with HIV to experience mental illness, especially depression and addiction, and they tend to be more isolated, according to the National Institute on Aging.

Getting linked to care and having access to mental health and other support services is important to help older people with HIV stay healthy and remain engaged in care. Support services are available through healthcare providers, local community centers, or HIV service organizations. The HIV Services Locator also can help individuals find services in their community.
